The Weis Center for Research Undergraduate Summer Internship Program is designed to encourage talented sophomores and junior science majors to pursue careers in the biological or biomedical sciences.

This program is open to students with a strong interest in basic research and a genuine interest in attending graduate or medical school. This paid internship program is 10 weeks long and combines an intense training in basic research with mentoring, seminars and journal club. At the end of the program all students are required to give an oral presentation of the research results; and complete a program evaluation.
