

Fixing the hospital's wagon

Donations provide fun and safe transport for children

Nothing makes a child happier than being pulled around in a wagon, especially ones that look like animals.

In an effort to make children feel more comfortable and a little happier during their hospital stay, Children's Miracle Network recently funded Wunderwagons for the medical surgical units and the pediatric intensive care unit at Geisinger Janet Weis Children's Hospital.

Made in the U.S., the wagons are constructed of a medical grade composite which makes for easy cleaning. They provide kids a friendly ride and feature a specific design of either an animal, reptile, fish or insect.

The popular wagons already are in use in the pediatric sedation suites on the first floor of the children's hospital.

The new wagons will have an IV trailer, which will allow patients and families to use the wagons with the IV pole in tow.

Put your money where the miracles are!
