Description: As part of NHLBI's ENRICH program, this research will test an implementation-ready intervention designed to improve cardiovascular health (CVH) among high risk mothers and young children during pregnancy and the first two years after delivery. Home visitation models meeting federal criteria of evidence effectiveness will be leveraged to compare home visiting programs against those with an additional CVH intervention in a cluster-randomized, multicenter trial.

Description: Cluster randomized controlled study to compare the effectiveness of enhancing routine well-child visits to prevent obesity among 2-5 year old children. Community arm includes a parent training program delivered via telehealth and a Cooking Matters® grocery tour with a trained nutritionist. Multi-level and parent-engaged models will be compared with usual clinical care on obesity prevention. Implementation outcomes and mediation/moderation analyses are planned.

The multi-site trial is testing whether the intervention can reverse metabolic syndrome in real-world settings and whether the intervention is cost-effective. Geisinger is one of five sites in the current trial.
